The original block of the single-story, hipped roof Ranch style house stands four bays wide and is capped with a hip roof. A screened-in porch was added to the building's western elevation, likely during the mid-twentieth century. Both the original building and porch are clad in brick and rest on brick foundations. The residence appears to retain its original two-over-two sash throughout all elevations. A centrally placed brick ridge chimney rises from building's roof.
