Governor Nikki Haley News

WJBF: Haley Talks Jobs In Town Overlooked for Decades

McCormick County is a peaceful place with fine food and friendly people. But, unfortunately things are a little too quiet: While South Carolina's unemployment rate hovers around eight percent, McCormick's is closer to 12 percent.

Note: Today Governor Nikki Haley spent the afternoon talking one-on-one to people in McCormick. They say that's a big deal, because they claim the last governor to visit was Carrol Campbell: He took office in 1987...Governor Haley says that's why it's so important she get on the ground and actually see the environments that need to attract industry. "I want to drive this as a CEO," Haley says. "I want to see what they see, see what's important, so when I'm driving a CEO here, I can talk about the goodness of McCormick. "And if we see challenges, we can fix it before that happens."

Governor says biggest plus for economy is to protect businesses already in SC

There is no magic bullet to economic prosperity even in a favorable economic climate. A proverbial, magic cannon would probably be insufficient to defeat the 8.4 percent unemployment afflicting South Carolina. In rural communities, such as Abbeville and McCormick counties, the affliction is even worse at 10.7 percent and 12.7 percent unemployment. But as Gov. Nikki Haley toured the Sage Automotive Interiors Sharon plant Wednesday in Abbeville, she offered a formula to bring jobs and wealth to the Lakelands.

Note: "You focus on the businesses you already have," Haley said. "Sage is a perfect example of a company doing well in a rural community. If I can keep them in profit margins and cash, they're going to continue to expand and grow their business, so that it continues to take care of a lot of families"...For Haley, the trip was an exercise in boots on the ground governance, something McCormick County hasn't had since Carroll Campbell was governor in 1987.
