Racism or racial profiling must be eradicated in our country; I know that policemen are reacting to what they have experienced in the line of duty. But regardless of how many black men commit the majority of crimes in certain communities, police still need to be trained more on the use of deadly force and when to draw their weapons in any community and dealing with any race. It should be a last resort and only when their lives are in immediate danger. Thorough training could make policemen feel more confident and in charge and least likely to grab for their guns. They also need to learn about the individuals they are patrolling. We fear what we don't know. That is plain and simple. It is hard to shoot someone once you know their day-to-day trials and heartaches. Officers need to be encouraged to get to know the people they serve. I don't know how much more this country can take: kids shooting kids, terrorists shooting anyone they can find, and police shooting African American men. We are better than this. We have to be better than this.
