The cat of the week is using his fish bowl to show off how intimidating he really is. That look of bold determination in his eyes proves that he's a brave individual and he has big, big plans.

Cat Country was booming and buzzin' this week with all kinds of action. Looks like our feline friends are still on the hunt for world domination — and they'll stop at nothing to get it. Let's break down the highlights for the week, shall we?

- 1) Although people sometimes forget lions are felines, this little lion cub tried his very best to roar and proved that lions are just as cute as any other cat.
- 2) This cat retired after working for 17 years as a "rodent control officer" on a famous ship.
- 3) A Tom and Jerry scene happened in real life when one cat was tormented by a clever little mouse.
- 4) Two extremely poofy Himalayan cats named Bonnie and Clyde took fluff to the absolute next level.
- 5) Finally, orange cats stepped into the spotlight to prove that they truly are the sweetest kitties in the entire world.

Cats stepped out into the great outdoors this week as well to prove that they're just as adventurous as any old dog. Truly inspirational work here, kitties.

But while some cats were satisfied with the simple pleasures of nature, another group of rogue individuals wanted something more— to watch the world burn. Cats can be pretty evil every once in a while, so you better watch out 'cause your own cat could be watching you in your sleep, and he might even murder you if you're not careful.

You can't blame cats when they act a little crazy though, because this world can be kind of confusing sometimes. It's all right felines, life isn't easy — so don't worry if you haven't quite got the hang of it yet.

Finally, Maru returned to gently remind us all that he is still the king of the internet, and nobody is taking that title from him.

It was another huge week for cats, but it doesn't end here! What could be in store for us next? Stay tuned!

And those were this week's links! Joining us again is Horoscope Cat, who is back to tell you what October is going to look like.

October has arrived at last, and on the 1st of the month you will find that the planet of fluff has moved into your fourth house — meaning that the season of hibernation and coziness is quickly approaching.

Romance is truly in the air on the 12th and will remain that way for the rest of the month, so make the most of it. If you have a special someone in your life, be sure to bring them plenty of dead animals to show your affection. Maybe even take them out on a special date — scratch a scratching post together, lick each other's fur, or share a ball of yarn together. These are the moments you should be cherishing.

As the month comes to an end you'll feel the snack planets align and all will be right in your world. Be patient, adventurous, and most of all — cozy. October is looking like a good one for you.
