South Carolina State Parks

at 0:30:01 on 12/08/2016 UTC · 🌐

December 7, 1941 -- a date which will live in infamy.....Have you ever noticed that the rock wall on the right side of the entrance to Lake Greenwood State Park is unfinished? Here's the story.... The CCC workers at Lake Greenwood began construction on the entrance wall to the park in the fall of 1941 but were interrupted following the bombing of Pearl Harbor on December 7. As word of the attack reached the park, the men of the CCC (working there) stopped their work. The country had entered World War II, and the CCC boys building the rock wall at Lake Greenwood were deployed to fight. They traded their axes and shovels for rifles and ammunition. The CCC never returned to finish their work at the park, and until this day, the rock entrance wall remains unfinished -- a symbolic reminder of what happened that day.

at 16:02:57 on 12/08/2016 UTC

Susan Bedenbaugh Powell What a touching story. A sobering reminder that freedom isn't free and so many have sacrificed for our freedom. The one sacrifice above all sacrifices was when our Savior died on a cross to free us from our sins if we accept Him in our hearts. Thank you Jesus!!!! You have set us free indeed as your children.

Daniel Newquist Hi Tim, Lake Greenwood State Park is definitely on my radar. I have not been but was aware of the CCC Museum and it seems like a very unique site as the FB post indicates. Paris Mountain State Park and Table Rock State Park are definitely on the agenda, Oconee State Park (site of CCC worker Statute) and Lake Greenwood State Park are strong possibilities as long as travel time/costs/other logistics don't make it prohibitive. Our Hub park for the event will be Paris Mountain State Park. Oconee State Park and Lake Greenwood State park are approximately 1.5 hours away but in opposite directions of Paris Mountain. Hopefully we can see them all. Plenty of CCC history to enjoy here in SC! More updates on the 2017 Annual Gathering coming soon!

John Banks I am from the Greenwood area and lived there all my life until this year. I have known of this story for many years. I have read the comments to finish the wall in honor of the men of the CCC. I would say that would be a dishonor. The wall has been like this for the past 75 years.

Let's just say someone took the time to finish the wall now, someone would probably put a plaque on it that would tell this same story. The wall will look great and all. Then think about the people driving by that would see the wall. They will see a finished wall and think nothing of it. They will see a plaque but not stop to read it.

Leave the wall as is, people will drive by and see an unfinished wall and wonder why was this wall not finished. It sparks an interest to find out, they ask questions, do some research or come to the park office to learn that answer. Then once the story is told they are intrigued and amazed, learning some of the great history that surrounds Greenwood County. I believe that would honor the men of the CCC more than anything.

Thanks to the men of the CCC for giving me a place to spend some time with my family and friends over the past 48 years.

Just putting in my 2 cents.

Bivens Smith Rinehart The unfinished wall has vastly more meaning than a finished one would. It might be nice to add a historical marker explaining its significance, however. Folks may wonder why it wasn't finished but put experience suggests that most won't be bothered to research. Maybe this would be a good Eagle Scour project? I could also see a short play being created explaining the significance as well as the role of the CCCAND it's connection to WWII. Great history project! It could be presented each year on Dec. 7 on the actual site . Just my thoughts ...

Martha Martin Black Richard Stutheit I agree with your remark about completing it AND with a marker placed where the completion is started noting that we carry on their work that was interrupted by their duty & call to service in their honor. A list of their names would be nice as well.
at 20:07:02 on 12/09/2019 UTC

Martha Martin Black Richard Stutheit I agree with your remark about completing it AND with a marker placed where the completion is started noting that we carry on their work that was interrupted by their duty & call to service in their honor. A list of their names would be nice as well stating that we stand in the gap, picking up your tolls to go forward in building & framing & never stopping.....

at 20:50:04 on 12/09/2019 UTC

Ritch Dotson There is a marker describing what it is and why it is as it is today.
at 20:55:45 on 12/09/2019 UTC

Ritch Dotson Joe Goldman there already is one
at 20:56:06 on 12/09/2019 UTC

Henry Boyter Somebody should put up a marker. $5 per politician should do it.
at 21:54:41 on 12/09/2019 UTC

Vanessa Hensley Yep, on the right just as you enter the park.
at 21:58:30 on 12/09/2019 UTC

Sonny Smith Totally agree
at 22:03:28 on 12/09/2019 UTC

William Mark Senn I work often in that area, and slow down each time I pass by the gate, to get a glimpse of the unfinished stonework, and the cut granite blocks in the woods. I think of the young men who built the park, and went to war. Hardly visible during the growing season, the cut blocks among the trees, still waiting to be placed, really stand out in winter.
